Mr. Secretary-General, friends in the global community, my minute y 6 segundos Opening remarks were in Te Reo Māori, the language of the indigenous people of our Tāhiti New Zealand, as is tradition. I minute y 15 segundos acknowledge those who are here, why we are here, and the importance of our work. minute y 23 segundos It seems a fitting place to stand. I'm struck as a leader attending my minute y 30 segundos first United Nations General Assembly by the power and the potential that resides minute y 38 segundos here, but in New Zealand we have always been acutely aware of that we are a minute y 47 segundos remote nation at the bottom of the South Pacific; our nearest neighbors take three hours to reach by plane and anywhere minute y 56 segundos that takes less than 12 hours is considered closed. I have no doubt though, minutos y 3 segundos that our geographic isolation has contributed to our values. We are a self minutos y 11 segundos deprecating people; we're not ones for status. We'll celebrate the local person who volunteers at this Sports Club as minutos y 20 segundos much as we will celebrate the successful entrepreneur, our empathy and strong minutos y 27 segundos sense of justice is matched only by our pragmatism. We are, after all, minutos y 34 segundos a country made up of two main islands, one simply named North and the other minutos y 41 segundos self for all of that, our isolation has not made us insular. In fact, our minutos y 50 segundos engagement with the world has helped shape who we are. I am a child of the 80s, minutos y 59 segundos a period in New Zealand's history where we didn't just observe international minutos y 5 segundos events; we challenged them, whether it was apartheid in South Africa or nuclear minutos y 13 segundos testing in the Pacific. I grew up learning about my country and who we minutos y 19 segundos were, by the way, that we reacted to international events, whether it was minutos y 26 segundos taking to the streets or changing our laws. We have seen ourselves as members of a community and one that we have a minutos y

36 segundos duty to use our voice within. I am an minutos y 41 segundos incredibly proud New Zealander, but much of that pride has come from being a minutos y 49 segundos strong and active member of our international community, not in spite of minutos y 55 segundos it, in the heart of that international community has been this place emerging minutos y 4 segundos from a catastrophic war. We have collectively established through convention, charters and rules, a set of minutos y 13 segundos international norms and human rights. All of these are an acknowledgment that we are not isolated; governments do have minutos y 22 segundos obligations to their people in each other, and that our actions have a global effect. In 1945,

New Zealand Prime minutos y 31 segundos Minister Peter Fraser said that the UN Charter offered perhaps a last opportunity to work in unison to realize minutos y 41 segundos the hope in the hearts of all of us for a peace that would be real, minutos y 47 segundos lasting and worthy of human dignity, but none of these founding principles should minutos y 54 segundos be consigned to the history books. In fact, given the challenges we face today and how truly global they are, in their minutos y 3 segundos nature and impact, the need for collective action and multilateralism has never been clearer, and yet for all minutos y 13 segundos of that, the debate and dialogue we hear globally is not centered on the relevance and importance of our minutes y 21 segundos international institutions and said we find ourselves having to defend their very existence that surely leaves us all minutes y 31 segundos with the question how did we get here and how do we get out now if anything minutes y 39 segundos unites us politically in this place right now it is this globalization has had a massive impact on our nation's and the minutes y 48 segundos people we serve now while that impact has been positive for many for others it minutes y 55 segundos has not the transition our economies have made has awesome been jarring in minutes y 2 segundos the consequences harsh and so amongst unprecedented global economic growth we minutes y 10 segundos have still seen a growing sense of isolation dislocation in a sense of minutes y 16 segundos insecurity and the erosion of hope now as politicians and governments we minutes y 24 segundos all have choices and how we respond to these challenges we can use the environment to blame nameless faceless minutes y 32 segundos other to feed the sense of insecurity to retreat into greater levels of minutes y 40 segundos isolationism or we can acknowledge the problems we have and we can seek to fix minutes y 48 segundos them in new zealand going it alone is not an option aside from our history as minutes y 57 segundos a trading nation and proudly so but we even without those founding principles there are not just minutes y 4 segundos questions of nationhood to consider there are generational demands upon us too it should hardly come as a surprise minutes y 14 segundos that we have seen a global trend of young people showing dissatisfaction with our political systems and calling minutes y 22 segundos on us to do things differently why wouldn't they where they themselves have had to adapt so rapidly to a minutes y 31 segundos changing world within a few short decades we now have a generation who will grow up more connected than ever minutes y 40 segundos before digital transformation will determine whether the jobs they are training for will even exist in two minutes y 48 segundos decades in education or the job market they won't just compete with their neighbor but their neighboring country minutes y 56 segundos this generation is a borderless one at least in a virtual sense one that increasingly sees themselves as global minutes y 5 segundos citizens and as their reality changes they expect that ours will - that we'll minutes y 13 segundos see and understand our collective impact and that we will change the way that we use our power and if we're looking for minutes y 23 segundos an example of where the next generation is calling on us to make that change we need look no further than climate change minutes y 32 segundos two weeks ago Pacific island leaders gathered together at the Pacific Islands Forum it was at this meeting on the minutes y 41 segundos small island nation of Nauru that climate change was declared to be the single biggest threat to security in the minutes y 50 segundos Pacific please just think about that for a moment of all of the challenges we minutes y 57 segundos debate and discuss rising sea levels present the single biggest threat to our minutes y 4 segundos region for those who live in the South Pacific the impacts of climate change are not academic or even arguable minutes y 12 segundos they are watching the sea levels rise the extreme weather events increase and the impact on their water supply and minutes y 20 segundos food crops now we can talk all we like about the science and what it means what temperature rises we need to limit in minutes y 29 segundos order to survive but there is a grinding reality in hearing someone from a Pacific island talk about where the sea minutes y 37 segundos was when they were a child and the potential loss of their entire village as an adult our action in the wake of minutes y 45 segundos this global challenge remains optional but the impact of inaction does not minutes y 52 segundos nations like Tuvalu the Marshall Islands or Kitab us small countries who have minutes contributed the least to global climate change are and will suffer the full force of a warming planet if my Pacific neighbors do not have the option of opting out of the effects of climate change why should we be able to opt out of taking action to stop it any disintegration of multilateralism any undermining of climate related targets and agreements and interesting footnotes in geopolitical history they are catastrophic in new zealand we are determined to play our part we will not issue any further offshore oil and gas exploration permits we have set a goal of a hundred percent renewable energy generation by 2035 established a green infrastructure fund to encourage innovation and rolled out an initiative to plant 1 billion trees over the next 10 years these plans are unashamedly ambitious the threat climate change poses demands it but we only represent less than 0.2% of global emissions that's why as a global community not since the inception of the United Nations has there been a greater example of the importance of collective action and multilateralism than climate can change it should be a rallying cry to all of us and yet there is a hesitancy that we can ill-afford a calculation of personal cost of self-interest but this is not the only challenge where domestic self-interest is the first response and where an international or collective approach has been diluted at best or rejected at worse but it would be both unfair and naive to argue that retreating to our own borders and interests has been turning our backs on a perfect system the international institutions we have committed ourselves to have not been perfect but they can be fixed and that is why the challenge I wish to issue today is this together we must rebuild and recommit to multilateralism we must redouble our efforts to work as a global community we must rediscover our shared belief in the value rather than the harm of connectedness we must demonstrate that collective international action not only works but it is in the best interests of all of us we must show the next generation that we are listening and that we have heard them but if we're truly going to take on or a forum agenda we need to acknowledge the failings that have led us to this crossroad international trade for instance has helped bring millions of people out of poverty around the world but some have felt their standard of living slide in New Zealand we ourselves have seen the hesitancy around trade agreements amongst our own population the correct response is not to repeat the mistakes of the past and be seduced by the false promises or protectionism rather we must all work to ensure that the benefits of trade are distributed fairly across our societies we can't rely on international institutions to do this in the same way is we cannot blame them if they haven't delivered these benefits it is incumbent on us to build productive sustainable inclusive economies and demonstrate to our peoples that when done right international economic integration can make all of us better off and if we want to ensure anyone is better off surely we should start with the most vulnerable in New Zealand we have set ourselves an ambitious goal we want to be the best place in the world to be a child it's hardly the stuff of hard and fast measures after all how do you measure a feeling of security and happiness but we can measure material deprivation and we can measure poverty and so we will

and not only that we are making it minutos y 58 segundoslaw that we report on those numbers every single year alongside our budgets minutos y 5 segundoswhat better way to hold ourselves to account and what better group to do that for than children but if we are focused minutos y 14 segundoson nurturing that next generation we equally have to worry about what it is that we are handing down to them minutos y 21 segundosincluding our environment and the Mari language there is a word that captures the importance of that role kaitiaki minutos y 30 segundosTaylor it means guardianship the idea that we have been entrusted with our environment minutos y 36 segundosand that we have a duty of care for us that has been taking action to address degree minutos y 44 segundoslike sitting standards to make our rivers swimmable reducing waste and phasing out single-use plastic bags minutos y 51 segundosright through to eradicating predators and protecting our biodiversity the race to grow our economies and increase minutoswealth makes us all the poorer if it comes at the cost of our environment in New Zealand we are determined to prove minutos y 8 segundosthat it doesn't have to be this way but these are all actions and initiatives that we can take domestically that ease minutos y 17 segundosthe blame and pressure on our international institutions that doesn't mean that they don't need fixing minutos y 25 segundosat the heart of the multilateral system the United Nations must lead the way minutos y 32 segundoswe strongly support the Secretary General's reform efforts to make the UN more responsive and effective modernized minutos y 41 segundosso that it is capable of dealing with today's challenges we encourage him to minutos y 47 segundosbe ambitious and we stand with him in that ambition but ultimately it is up to minutos y 55 segundosus the Member States to drive change here at the UN this includes reforming minutos y 3 segundosthe Security Council if we want the council to fulfill its purpose of maintaining international peace and minutos y 10 segundossecurity its practices need to be updated so it is not hamstrung by the minutos y 17 segundosuse of the veto new thinking will also be needed if we to achieve the vision minutos y

24 segundosencapsulated and the sustainable development goals in New Zealand we have sought to embed the principles behind minutos y 31 segundosthe SDGs and a new living standards framework there's guiding policymaking and the management of our resources and minutos y 40 segundoswe remain absolutely committed to supporting the rollout of the SDGs alongside international partners through minutos y 48 segundosa significant increase in our official development assistance budget but revitalizing our international minutos y 57 segundosrules-based system isn't just about the mechanics of how we work together it also means renewing our commitment to minutos y 5 segundosour values the UN Charter recalls that the organization was formed to save succeeding generations from the scourge minutos y 14 segundosof war which through two world wars wars had brought untold sorrow to humanity if minutos y 22 segundoswe forget this history and the principles which drove the creation of the UN we will be doomed to repeat the minutos y 31 segundosmistakes of the past in an increasingly uncertain world that is more important than ever that we minutos y 39 segundosremember the core values on which the UN was built that all people are equal that everyone is entitled to have their minutos y 46 segundosdignity and human rights respected that we must strive to promote social progress and better standards of life minutos y 54 segundosand larger freedom and we must consistently hold ourselves to account on each

Munks renewing this commitment minutos y 4 segundosthough we have to acknowledge where accountability must continue and that is especially the case when it comes to minutos y 12 segundosequality so many gains have been made each worthy of celebration in New minutos y 20 segundosZealand we have just mark the one hundred and twenty-fifth years since women were granted the right to vote we minutos y 27 segundoswere the first in the world to do so as a girl I never ever grew up believing minutos y 34 segundosthat my gender would stand in the way of me achieving whatever I wanted in life I am after all not the first but the third minutos y 43 segundosfemale prime minister of New Zealand but for all of that we still have a gender minutos y 51 segundospay gap an over-representation of women and low paid work and domestic violence and we are not alone minutos y 59 segundosit seems surprising that in this modern age we have to recommit ourselves to gender equality that we do and I for one minutos y 9 segundoswill never celebrate the game we have made for women domestically while internationally other woman and minutos y 16 segundosgirls experience a lack of the most basic opportunities and dignity me too minutos y 24 segundosmust become we too we are all in this together minutos y 31 segundos minutos y 37 segundosnow I accept that the list of demands on all of us is long be it domestic or minutos y 44 segundosinternational we are operating in challenging times we face what we would call in New Zealand wicked problems ones minutos y 53 segundosthat are intertwined and interrelated perhaps in it is time to step back from the chaos and ask what we want it is in minutos y 2 segundosthat space that will find simplicity the simplicity of peace of prosperity of minutos y 9 segundosfairness if I could distill it down into one concept that we are pursuing a New Zealand it is simple and it is this minutos y 18 segundoskindness in the face of isolationism protectionism racism the simple concept minutos y 27 segundosof looking outwardly and beyond ourselves of kindness and collectivism might just be as good a starting point minutos y 35 segundosas any so let's start here with the institutions that have served us well and times of need and will do so again minutos y 44 segundosin the meantime I can assure all of you New Zealand remains committed to continue to do our part to building and minutos y 53 segundossustaining international peace and security to promoting and defending an open inclusive and rules-based minutos y 1 segundointernational order based on universal values to being pragmatic empathetic minutos y 8 segundosstrong and kind the next generation after all deserves no less dinner Coto minutos y
